Hi Speed – When It's Coming, and Where's It Going, and Where It's Not

Hi-speed Internet access for all of Haliburton County continues to be a major issue for County officials, business leaders, and politicians of all stripes. Last week at the County's 1st Annual Warden's Breakfast, Economic Development Director Bob Smith identified hi-speed access as a major factor in luring businesses to the area – and convincing seasonal residents to spend even more productive time here.

"Hi-speed access is an essential part of any community's infrastructure – and we must have it in order to expand our economic base," said Smith. Later on, during the meeting, County Chief Administrative Officer (CAO) Jim Wilson was happy to let the gathering know that there could be a significant hi-speed funding announcement from the provincial government within the next month – but he was unable to provide the details at this time. In fact, there have been lots of developments on the hi-speed front recently, including major development with both Bell, which is aggressively pursuing new opportunities, and W3 Connex, which slid into receivership last month.

The fact of the matter is that building hi-speed networks that can service the entire County is an extremely expensive business. Back in 2002, the County established the Haliburton Connect Public Sector Alliance, partnering with Fleming College, and the Trillium Lakeland District School Board to try and persuade governments and private interests to come together to provide a broadband network. After much preliminary work, government funding dried up, and the project stagnated. The County then managed to bring the Municipalities and Haliburton Highlands Health Services on board and contracted with a company called W3Connex to build a fibre optics network through some of the main routes of the County.

These routes would service the primary partners, with residential and small business customers coming on board via towers and micro wave signal. Well, after three years of waiting, it's become clear that only the original partners were going to benefit from that arrangement. W3 Connex managed only to sign a few hundred private subscribers: some industry analysts found their original business plan to be wildly expensive and unworkable. And last month the company went into receivership.

One of W3 Connex' competitors, Candlelight Communications, felt from the beginning that the County's relationship with Connex was doomed. After all, Candlelight had built a modestly successful company providing wireless hi-speed to urban centres here and in Muskoka with no government monies, and they know just how difficult and costly these networks are. "We felt that there was no justification back then with government spending that sum of money on a fibre optic network that would serve so few people," says Johan Carenll, Vice-President and Chief Financial Officer of Candlelight. He also wanted to point out that Candlelight was not a contender to take over Connex' remaining private customers. "Our major focus is companies and government agencies in the larger centres of Muskoka and Haliburton, organizations that need highly reliable and fast service for transmitting large amounts of information, like publishers, architects, engineers, hospitals and so on. The District of Muskoka itself is a major customer of ours. We're also expanding our service as a provider of hi-speed to local Independent Service Providers. Where there is a demand, we'll certainly be building more towers, in concert with local providers."

It should be pointed out that existing corporate and government customers of W3 Connex are in no danger of losing their service – buyers will be found. But it's instructive of just how difficult this game is in areas where the population is small and the terrain challenging. For its part, Bell has made a significant attempt to expand its service by establishing a number of new Digital Service Loops (DSL) builds throughout the County. Jim Neubauer, General Manager for Bell of Ontario East and the Kawarthas, is delighted with the County's determination to do what it can to help Bell provide greater coverage. County CAO Jim Wilson commented that, "we need all our residents, seasonal and permanent, to let Bell know that they want the service, and where they are located."

Jim Neubauer also emphasized that potential customers were welcome to email him with their specific location and interest at jim.neubauer@bell.ca.

And now for the really good news - here's a list of the locations of Bell's new DSLs:

West Guilford – Haliburton Lake – available by May 24th
Fort Irwin west on Haliburton Lake Road to 911 # 2800
Fort Irwin north on Haliburton Lake Road to 911 # 5858
All of Curry Road
All of Oblong Lake

Carnarvon – Ox Narrows – available by May 26th
Kushog Lake Road south to approx. 911 # 2800
All of Kabakwa Lake
All of Welch Lake and Lower Welch Lake
Hwy 35 south to approx. 911 # 1948
South on Shangri La to 911 # 1948

Delta Pinestone Inn – available early July
Hwy # 21 from Wonderland Road to Osprey Road
All of Wigamog Road
East side of Soyers Lake.

In fairness, it should be said that there exists another way to get hi-speed in Haliburton, through the Xplornet system of satellite dishes and wireless modems. But the service is expensive to install and isn't particularly fast. However, it may be the only hi-speed solution available to many people for some time to come. The announcement expected from Queen's Park within a few weeks should help clarify just how quickly Bell can build more DSL's. For its part, Bell is also becoming more and more involved on a community level, helping out with Cottage Dreams charity, among others.

So, there is some hi-speed light at the end of the tunnel. And the residential service Bell is providing is reliable and very fast. Just make sure to let Bell know that you're interested and where you are. ■

Mary Hamilton, Nurse

Longstanding Haliburton Nurse Reflects on Career in Celebration of National Nursing Week

Laura Salverda
Staff Reporter

As it turns out, Grandma did know best – at least in the case of Mary Hamilton.

Hamilton, one of the longest serving Registered Nurses in Haliburton, was selected by the Haliburton Highlands Hospital Service administration for a nursing profile to help celebrate Nursing Week, May 12-16.

Hamilton was able to do a telephone interview this week from her son's home, while providing care for her "almost one-year-old" grandson Cole, on her day off.

"I'm very family oriented," Hamilton said, which is probably a bit of an understatement. Hamilton was born in the old, old Haliburton hospital (where The Moose is now located), and she can claim family ties to many area businesses -- Monck's Funeral Home, the old general store in Minden, and her grandfather was Postmaster. Her mother was a Boice, and her dad a Welch from the Minden area. But it was her grandmother who most influenced what has since become a 32-year career in nursing. With her husband Brian she's raised three sons, Matthew, Michael and Mark.

"All through high school, I thought I would go into pharmacy, but I had a grandmother who wanted another nurse in the family," Hamilton said. Her grandmother wasn't a nurse herself, but she admired her sister-in-law who was, and she asked Hamilton to consider becoming a nurse as well. Did her grandmother see that compassionate nature in Hamilton, that compassion that Hamilton now recognizes in herself?

"I don't know, maybe. So many days I've said to myself, 'Grandma, you sure knew what you were doing,'" Hamilton said, laughing.

Hamilton began her R.N. training at Wellesley Hospital in Toronto, but switched to Peterborough during the 1970s transition period when nursing training was being moved out of the hospitals and into the colleges. Hamilton was living in residence right on the hospital site in Toronto, and would have had to find another place to live. With a great-aunt in Peterborough and the convenience of Sir Sandford Fleming and the two hospitals in the city for practice work, Hamilton made the move. She graduated in 1976 in Peterborough to a health care system that didn't need new nurses.

"There were no jobs then. Nurses would graduate and go out west, out east or to Texas. That's where I thought I'd end up too, in Texas."

But calling herself fortunate, Hamilton was then able to return home to Haliburton, where she has worked ever since, first with Extencicare, and then with the Red Cross Outpost Hospital in Haliburton, and now with HHHS.

Hamilton uses the word adaptable a lot, when she describes herself. She credits her upbringing, her ability to balance work, marriage and raising three sons, and even the Haliburton location with giving her that useful skill set.

"I've had to be adaptable. There are always so many changes, especially in a smaller area like Haliburton."

Hamilton recalls the early days at the hospital outpost that had one X-ray technician who didn't work nights or weekends.

"We had to be trained to do x-rays and develop them," Hamilton said. "Nurses don't have to do any of that work now. That's a four-year course in itself. We've come a long way."

Hamilton even remembers putting pots of water on to boil for the kitchen staff before she left for the evening, "for the morning porridge." Hamilton's continued success in her field also comes from her ability to have empathy with her patients.

"I always put myself in their place," Hamilton said. "Maybe someone is having a really bad day, or maybe they're losing a loved one, or maybe their child is sick. All of those situations are very stressful, and that first person that they come into contact with at the hospital is going to make their visit. Thirty-two years into it and I always have that in my mind."

Many area residents have probably met up with Hamilton as she worked triage in the emergency ward.

"I love emerg," Hamilton said. "Yes, it probably is unusual, but I love it. I never know what's coming through the door – it keeps you on your toes, and you're always learning."

In a small town hospital, doctors are not always available either.

"You have to know when to act. I've had to be trained to use a defibrillator, and resuscitated somebody. Then you see them later in the store. It's very rewarding."

Hamilton has taken advantage of every possible learning course that has come her way, and her passion for her profession is readily apparent in her voice.

"I have a very open mind. Okay, so we used to do this, but now we do this. There is always some new procedure to learn, or something we had never done before. Learning has made me want to stay."

Hamilton also loves mentoring other nurses and spent 11 years as a Preceptor or overseer for nurses graduating from Georgian and Sir Sandford Fleming Colleges and from Windsor University.

"Working at the Red Cross Outpost, I had so many wonderful mentors. That's how I learned, and that's also why I've stayed on so long."

"Working with new nurses, I can learn so much from them, and I can also share my education and my experience."

Several years ago, Hamilton was selected to serve on a committee that looked at how colleges could incorporate improved hands-on training to Personal Support Worker programs.

"It was great. I love new and interesting things, and I was able to help by sharing some of my experience."

Throughout her career, Hamilton has worked as charge nurse, responsible for ordering supplies and medications, obstetrics (her other favourite), and she is fully certified in cardiac, gerontology and emergency.

She currently shares shifts between emergency and acute care at HHHS.

"I have had so many wonderful experiences," Hamilton said. "Every day I get to make a difference in someone's life."

"I wish I could do another 30 years. And I say that from the bottom of my heart." ■

Recognizing the Importance of Our Forests A Celebration of Research Held At Haliburton Forest

A day for the celebration of research was held at the Haliburton Forest and Wildlife Reserve (H.F.) on Friday, May 9.

Experts like Carsten Brueggemann of the Chamber of Agriculture in Niedersachsen, Germany, spoke about biofuels and why they are a better alternative to fossil fuels. In Germany, wood chips are commonly used to create energy which doesn't emit harmful greenhouse gases.

Haliburton Forest staff members also spoke about current research projects they are involved with along with presenters from the U of T Faculty of Forestry.

Peter Schlieffenbaum, owner of Haliburton Forest and Wildlife Reserve, said that this was the fifth year of the informal meeting and it was the second time the public was invited.

He explained why forests play such a significant role in our everyday lives.

"Our forests in the future will become more important, so we need to recognize that," said Schlieffenbaum. He says these research projects are extremely important in order to help protect our forests and sustain them for the future.

"There are some things we don't understand. We need to be able to better understand these functions of the forest and mitigate some of the damages we might be doing." ■

New at the Voice

As the Voice prepares to serve our readers and our community throughout the long hot summer we're pleased to announce some important additions to our staff.

Linsey Trotter joins us as Accounts and Office Administrator: she hails from Gooderham, was born in Haliburton and is a graduate of Haliburton High School. She has her Business Diploma from Fleming College in Peterborough.

Lisa Bridge is our new Art Director: she has a Graphic Design Diploma from Mohawk College and was most recently designer for Open Magazine, published in Stratford. Lisa is from Listowel and is delighted to be back in small-town Ontario.

Tyson Farrell has joined our editorial department and will be contributing both to the Highlands Communicator and to the Voice for the summer. A Gelert native and graduate of Haliburton High School, Tyson was the Minden Times student reporter for many years. He's currently pursuing a joint major honours degree at Trent University in History and International Development and will be travelling to Ghana in September for a year of study at the University of Accra.

Laura Salverda is a veteran reporter, photographer, and editor with over 15 years experience in community and daily newspapers across Southern Ontario. She will be editor of the Highlands Communicator, and will write, report and edit for the Voice. She's been a Haliburton cottager since childhood, and says that the opportunity to move to the area permanently was just too good to resist.

Take a Trip to the 'Garden of Life'

Mark Arike
Staff Reporter

Ira Andrews, owner of A Little Bit of Everything in Minden, has published a 90-page book that will tell you all about his gardening experiences. Not only that, but you'll be able to take a bit of journey through the author and store owner's life.

Started back in December of 1990, "Garden of Life" was a project that Andrews spent seven years developing.

"This book is a collection of all the articles that I wrote," he said. "My wife (Debbie) and I had it published and printed ourselves."

Andrews first began writing a gardening column for the Guysborough Gazette newspaper in Truro, Nova Scotia about 18 years ago. After going on a short hiatus, he then got back to writing a similar column for The Journal newspaper in Antigonish, Nova Scotia during 1997.

When Andrews was a young boy, he quickly developed an interest in gardening while helping his father and mother in their garden. During those days he used to jump on his bicycle and deliver vegetables door-to-door in the neighbourhood. Ever since then, he admits to being hooked on horticulture.

After completing high school, he earned a Bachelor of Science degree in Agriculture from the Nova Scotia Agricultural College in 1988, and then went on to get a Bachelor of Education degree from Saint Francis Xavier University in 1989.

Andrew spoke about the garden he grew while living in Nova Scotia.

"My garden was 3,000 sq. ft. of vegetables." In this garden, he had a little bit of everything, including asparagus, beans, carrots, broccoli, tomatoes, zucchini and potatoes.

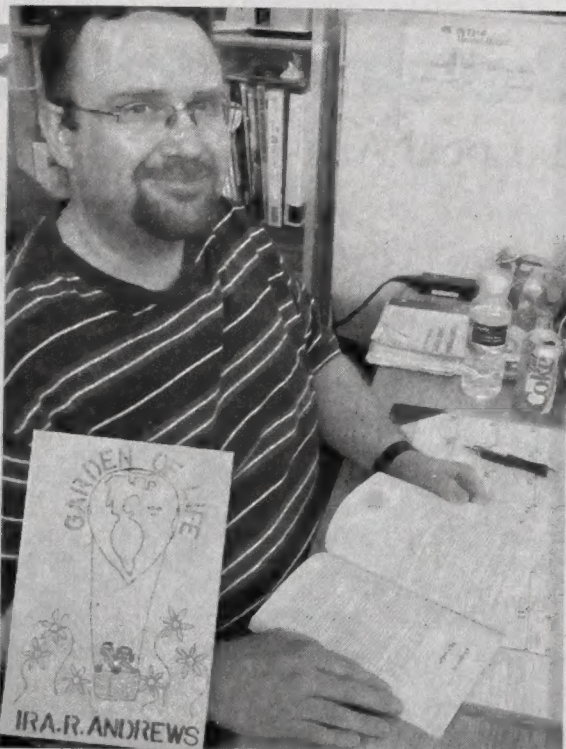

Andrews has arranged this book in a way that follows a sequence of events over a seven-year period. Articles in the book cover a wide range of topics including tips on how to compost, harvest, and how to prevent insects and animals from destroying your garden.

"I also have some funny stories," Andrews says of tales that were inspired from the gardening off-season. For instance, he wrote about chickens that he used to look after while he wasn't busy getting his hands dirty in the soil. In the book he also reminisces about leaving the bachelor life behind and heading off to the big city of Toronto for the first time.

Andrews says that his book would be the perfect purchase for people who take up gardening as a hobby.

"It's for those who are looking for some light reading."

Andrews' book 'Garden of Life' is available for $4.95 plus tax at his store, A Little Bit of Everything, located on Hwy 35, just past Dollo's IGA. ■

Victoria Ward: Rockets and Gallows

Rail's End Hosts Local Artist

Terrance Gavan
Staff Reporter

The bleak contretemps of a post apocalyptic landscape moves through the wooded canvas of Victoria Ward's paintings. Bright intense and vivid explosions of color inspire photographs of early 20th century mine shaft head frames also known as gallows. The gallows and other photos taken of present day Cobalt, Ontario are focal points in each of Ward's paintings.

Ward's one woman show, rockets & gallows, an exploration of a post-urban world and its cosmic destiny opened at Rail's End Gallery Saturday, May 2nd and the artwork will be on display until June 21st.

Cobalt was once recognized as the silver mining capital of the world. Silver was discovered in the area in the summer of 1903. Within a few years the area was one of the largest silver producing areas on the planet. Mining continued until the 1930s, then slowed to a trickle.

Ward says she chose Cobalt as art subject, because the town presented as an enigma. A turn-of-the-century boomtown that now grapples to find its niche. There is free-for-all on Ward's acrylic on plywood renderings, which mirrors Cobalt's attempts at defining purpose. But Ward paints this struggle with an underlying message, borne from a celebrated past that the town will never be able to leave behind. Indeed, as it strives to present as an historic locale, in an to become a significant if not iconoclastic tourist hub, it serves to ingrain its past ever deeper into the combined psyche of the inhabitants.

We tend to think of boomtowns as moribund; collapsible caricatures mired in a vainglorious past. But the brightness and bounty of the underlying acrylic cacophony in Ward's depiction of Cobalt dispels any overarching impression of hopelessness. Look past the bleak weathered framework of mine shaft gallows placed precariously on hills at sunset and one is reminded of the notion of yin and yang. Ward's paintings serve up a bittersweet concoction of hope, destiny, despair and valour.

She sees gallows, but she also began to see, in the stark head frame silhouettes, the vivid outline of rocket ships. In one painting she has a photograph of a gallows moving away from steep cliff and sparking skyward like an Apollo moon shot, toward what is presumably a date with destiny. In other paintings she blends bits of metal with acrylic and photos interspersed with pieces of prose. Ward is a painter and a poet, with a background in the theater. In rockets and gallows Ward delivers an eclectic pastiche that stirs the imagination. The works are stark and yet pleasing to the eye.

"The town is at once a place of notorious history, gothic landscapes, eccentric lore, sadness and hope," says Ward in an introduction to the exhibit. "Cobalt fulfills most of the criteria I need to make paintings."

In a short introductory talk at the exhibit opening Ward delved into her fascination with the town and its attendant architecture. "I began to see the head frames as rockets, vessels representing vaulted aspirations reaching for the stars," explains Ward. "They were also like gallows, structures that represent death, martyrdom and tragic destiny."

She says that after spending one autumn in Cobalt she was intrigued and returned for a second stopover in the following year. During the second visit she began to see the "two sides to exploration." Ward explains that, "exploration illustrates our desire to search and destroy," adding that, "painting is like that for me. I build up images and take them down over and over, until I have found that precious thing which turns desire into art."

Ward says that she took in all of the stories, listened to the people and became aware that the town was inextricably tied to its past. She hiked abandoned trails and took many photos of those old, weathered gallows, standing sentinel to the myriad shafts that still linger under the town and the surrounding countryside. "I work with photographs because I like the way photography distills time," says Ward, who works from her home and studio near Gooderham.

Asked why a lot of the photos are perched high on acrylic cliff sides, Ward says that it blends nicely with the nervousness she found in the town. The Cobalt area is laced with many miles of underground mine workings, as well as surface trenches, pits and shaft openings. As a result, there are risks of collapse and stories of such disasters abound in the anecdotes of the townspeople.

"I thought of the lore and the miles of abandoned shafts; and I would put the buildings in precarious positions... the mine shafts are still there and there is a tension in the town," explains Ward.

Interestingly, her partner Gary Blundell, an artist in his own right, has a background in geology and Ward found intrigue in Cobalt, hearing that it has become a stopping place for astro-geologists who were looking at the ancient fossils dug up by years of open pit and underground operations. They are finding parallels between fossils in Cobalt and discovered in pictures being sent patterns being back from the roving camera on Mars.

"And there's another specific criteria of lore to add," smiles Ward. It also adds corroborating relevance, in some strange way, to Ward's depiction of gallows as rockets.

Ward was originally trained in theater arts while studying at York University and, after she graduated, she spent the nineties working as a professional playwright and collaborating with Toronto's most alternative artists including: Theatre Gargantua, DNA Theater, Autumn Leaf Performance, Kensington Carnival and Crow's Theater.

But after a while, Ward says she had to leave the theater, because in the end she found that it wasn't working for her. "Theater is a really collaborative process and it took me years to figure out that out," smiles Ward, in an interview after the show.

She found that she took more solace in the singular aspects of painting.

She also writes poetry and there was a bound book of art and poems on display at the gallery. She has a chapbook published, 'notes from a log cabin', published by Camenae Press in 2003. The new book, 'shining or something electric', a poetry and imagery book, is an homage to Ward's love of words and metaphor.

That love of metaphor is reflected in her artwork. "I don't like to define things too much," says Ward. "I go to Cobalt and I learn, I meet people and I hear the stories and I try to synthesize that."

It's obvious as she speaks that painting is integral to her being.

"I really love painting," says Ward. "You have to have a firm plan and you need a strong technique."

She told us that her hero is Vincent van Gogh.

"He had a big open heart and for him, painting was a way to connect with the world."

In 'rockets & gallows' Victoria Ward has introduced us to her world. It turns out that it's a pretty nice place to spend a Saturday afternoon.

Victoria Ward's website is located at www.hotspurstudio.com/. She will be hosting another one-woman show at artguise in Ottawa from May 9-28. ■

Highland Landmark Receives Much Needed Restoration

The Pyramids, the Great Wall of China, Castles of Great Britain, heritage homesteads here in the West...they're all landmarks we know, and expect to see or visit while on vacation. They are photos in a coffee table book. The memory of a particular sight that identifies a time and place stays with us...and then there is the BIG RED chair in West Guilford. Time has taken its toll on this local landmark, and it needs to be repaired. Relax, this is not a fundraiser.

Cottage Country Log Cabin has commissioned craftsman Stephen Brellisford to rebuild the gigantic six foot tall chair. "The existing chair has always been popular with visitors to the store, but it had become unsafe ...another year of photo-ops by customers was out of the question. I needed a new big chair," says Patricia Bertram of Cottage Country Log Cabin. Landmarks of historical note are maintained for obvious reasons, and then are those less important reasons. These include kids in the back seat on the way to the cottage saying, "There's the big red chair. We're almost there!"

Cottage Country Log Cabin approached Brellisford of Ruffworks Reproductions and Restorations last fall to rebuild the chair. Brellisford has been doing antique restorations and reproduction as hobby since the 70's. Since he moved to Haliburton in 1999, he has had many requests to build a variety of cottage comforts, or to restore pieces of furniture left behind when a cottage has been sold. "I was a Haliburton weekend cottager in the 80's and the chair became a familiar sight when I would come to the then bakery at the West Guilford location," Brellisford said. Now a permanent resident of Eagle Lake he gets to do the work he enjoys in the rural area he has come to know as home.

With a newly built workshop addition at his home Stephen was looking for the inaugural project to break it in. "The chair fit the bill," he said. "I got to build the next generation of this familiar landmark that I knew all those years ago...and you've got to like the indoor work during the winter months living here in the Highlands."

Patricia at the Cottage Country Log Cabin has enjoyed great success with her all Canadian 100 percent recycled plastic Adirondack chairs. The larger-than-life red signature Adirondack chair will take its rightful place on Kennisis Lake Road, on the front lawn of the Cottage Country Log Cabin within the next few days. It has been completely rebuilt out of pressure-treated spruce. "It's been built to last," Brellisford says. "It will outlast me, and act as a landmark for many more generations of Highland cottagers."

We asked people around town, "What will you be doing on the Victoria Day Long Weekend?"

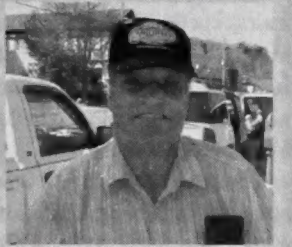

Suzanne Paavola, Irondale — "I'll be doing some yard work and getting some much needed R&R. I'm looking forward to having a nice long weekend."

Dick Smith, Donald — "I haven't got anything planned. I'll probably go to a lot of yard sales."

Furgie Haliburton — "I'm going fishing at Head Lake. I'm just going to relax and probably walk through the bush. I like watching the nature."

Terry Davis, Haliburton — "I'm not doing anything. I just got back from a week long vacation in Virginia. I'll likely relax at home. It's a good time to stay off the roads anyways."

Carol Hussul, Maple Lake — "I'll just be relaxing. I'll be boating at the cottage and probably be at barbecues with family. May do some fireworks, depending on the weather. I'll be wacking at those black flies."

Jennifer Wilson, Haliburton — "I'll be trying to avoid the black flies! We'll have dinner guests over on Sunday and we'll also be doing some entertaining. We were going to go four-wheeling, but because of the black flies, we decided to just entertain guests instead."

30-Hour Famine More Money Raised

In last week's edition of The Voice, we featured an article on the 30-Hour Famine held at Haliburton Highlands Secondary School (HHSS).

At press time, we hadn't heard that Grade 11 student Rachel Burk brought in the highest donation total — a truly impressive $421.00. Burk was also kind enough to give $20 to a friend so that she could enter the famine.

Also, the event ran from midnight of May 1 — 6 a.m. on May 3, and not from 6 p.m. May 1 — midnight the next day as originally stated.

We'd like to congratulate Burk and all the other students of HHSS who helped raise over $9,000 in this annual initiative.

In Memory

GLEN BIRD In Loving memory of a dear Husband, Father & Grandfather who passed away May 18, 2006.

Today recalls the memory
Of a loved one gone to rest,
And those who think of him today.
Are those who loved him best.
The flowers we lay upon his grave
May wither and decay,
But the love for him who lies beneath,
Will never fade away.
Lovingly remembered by Marie, Dee, Lisa & Families.

Jammin' the Blues With Clark Guettel July 21 - 25

at the West Guilford Community Centre

Have you ever wanted to play in a band or just jam music with your friends? This music program was developed for both the novice and experienced musician. Starting with a blues format, you will learn the basics of improvisation as well as combo arrangements. Improvising music is the spontaneous creation of melody based on chord and rhythm structure. You don't have to be able to read music.

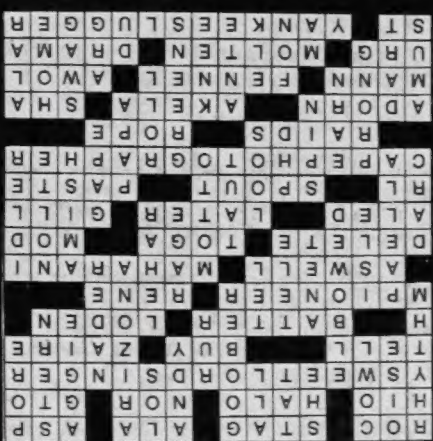

This program is based on chord theory and playing by ear. We'll cover many different styles and play music all week in a comfortable group learning environment. Open to all instruments: Guitars, bass, keys, drums, horns, vocals, etc.

This is an adult program and teens are welcome.
